

Unique program provides aid to communities worldwide

Captain Mark Drewelow, owner of yacht agency C2C San Diego, has experienced firsthand the growth of the superyacht industry in the Pacific Northwest, British Columbia and Alaska over the last decade. As founder and Executive Director of YachtAid Global (YAG) he is excited because this growth creates opportunities for the delivery of humanitarian, development and conservation aid to coastal communities worldwide.

YachtAid Global delivers to schools, medical clinics, cultural centres and other organizations in remote and isolated locations including Alaska, Indonesia, Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, French Polynesia, Mexico, Chile, Brazil and more. They work with an impressive roster of superyachts to provide the owners, crew and the maritime community with an outlet to give back in a unique way that does not change the course of their cruise.

YachtAid Global utilizes a network of volunteers who co-ordinate logistics, patrons who sponsor supplies and superyacht owners and crew that offer to transport them. Canadian volunteer Darryl Anderson of Wave Point Consulting commented that YachtAid Global offers many ways to help because "you can donate, provide school supplies, clothing, toys, food and or cash".

Royal name restored

The Honourable Peter MacKay, Minister of National Defence, announced that the Government of Canada has restored the use of the historic designations of the three former services: the Royal Canadian Navy (RCN), the Canadian Army (CA), and the Royal Canadian Air Force (RCAF).

"Restoring these historic identities is an important way of reconnecting today's men and women in uniform with the proud history and traditions they carry with them as members of the Canadian Forces," said Minister MacKay. "A country forgets its past at its own peril. From Vimy Ridge to the Battle of the Atlantic and from Korea to the defence of Europe during the Cold War, the proud legacy of the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army, and the Royal Canadian Air Force will once again serve as a timeless link between our veterans and serving soldiers, sailors and air personnel."

By reinstating the Royal Canadian Navy, Canadian Army, and the Royal Canadian Air Force, the Government is restoring a central component of Canada's military heritage.
